

Graphic: Workplace Evolution: 2025 and Beyond

Dr. Eliza Filby

Hi, I'm Dr. Eliza Filby. I'm a Generations Expert that studies the future of work. So I'm looking forward to sharing my research on what a multi-generational workplace looks like in the 2020s.

Aoife Coll

My name is Aoife Coll and I'm a senior associate on the Technology and Innovation Group at Arthur Cox. Today I'm talking about data protection and more specifically recent enforcement by the Irish regulator and the European regulators and also some recent decisions from the Court of Justice of the European Union.

Adam Harris

My name is Adam Harris and I'm the founder and CEO of as I am Ireland's Autism charity. In my session today, I'm going to be exploring the barriers autistic people can face to accessing employment, the significant contribution autistic people can make to the world of work, and the practical measures businesses can take to alleviate those barriers so that autistic people have the same chance to contribute within the workplace. These events provide an opportunity for people to build their knowledge and to have a safe space to explore this area. In holding this event, I think Arthur Cox is putting this on the agenda as a topic that every workplace should be thinking about and I think that sends a really important message both internally to autistic and neurodivergent colleagues, but also it challenges others to follow suit.

Joanelle O'Cleirigh

My name is Joanelle O'Cleirigh. I'm a partner in the Litigation, Dispute Resolution and Investigations Group in Arthur Cox. It's a great opportunity to meet with our clients to share our knowledge and information and also wider issues such as what I will be discussing concerning neurodiversity and disability.

Declan MacQuillan

My name is Declan MacQuillan. I'm a senior associate in the Employment Group. Today I'm talking about neuroinclusivity in the workplace and how our clients as employers can go about fostering and supporting their employees who have a neurodiversity.

Kate O'Donohoe

I'm Kate O'Donohue. I am of counsel in our Litigation, Dispute Resolution and Investigations Group in Arthur Cox. They give an opportunity for sharing of information where we can all get ideas from each other and learn from each other.

Kevin Langford

I'm Kevin Langford. I'm a partner in the Employment Law Group at Arthur Cox. I will be covering current trends in protected disclosures.

Richard Willis

My name is Richard Willis and I'm a partner in the Litigation, Dispute Resolution and Investigations Group in Arthur Cox. Events like this are really important to create awareness around the topics that are top of mind for our clients and certainly in the context of the panel we're dealing with today, cyber awareness and cybersecurity and cyber attack issues, they are really top of mind for in-house counsel at the moment.

Olivia Mullooly

My name is Olivia Mullooly. I'm a partner in the Technology and Innovation Group in Arthur Cox. Events like this are important because it gives all of our clients an opportunity to share experiences, to ask questions and get the benefit of our experience from having managed several cyber attacks over the years, and also to identify those best practises that they can take back to their organisation, having received the benefit of our experience and advice as to how to best manage your organisation through a time of crisis, in the event it's a victim of a cyber attack.

Kevin Langford

I love the fact that by attending, I'm meeting up with clients and people that I know, including alumni from Arthur Cox.

Declan MacQuillan

They offer clients the opportunity to come together, to think about the issues that are relevant to them, both as an employer, but specific to their sector areas and I think it also offers us a great opportunity to showcase the talent and the expertise that we have in the firm in our various specialist areas.

Kate O'Donohoe

For more information, please visit arthurcox.com/bestpractises